To the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and the Head Office of the Xinhua [News Agency]:

On India's invasion of Paksitan, [North] Korea offered purely objective coverage of the war on the 8th and 9th [of September 1965], and quoted the news agencies of both India and Pakistan. Only on the 8th was there a title with a slight bias: "India invades Pakistan's territory." The full text of the reports in the [North] Korean media are attached as reference into today's telex to the Head Office [of Xinhua].

On the 10th and then again today, there has unexpectedly not been a single word related to this news.

Our government's statement has not been published. In [North] Korea's National Day celebrations, the leaders' speeches did not mention a single word about India's invasion of Pakistan. Today, excerpts from Premier Zhou's speech from the evening of the 9th [were included], but they simply and hastily mentioned this matter. [The excerpts] did not include the words "aggression" or "opposed to this invasion," nor did it include the words "modern revisionism."
